Welcome to the Writers Newsletter

Jolene's eBooks and More and Webs and Blogs For Writers is creating a monthly newsletter for its readers and writers of their blogs. Bringing together helpful information for writers, book reviews for readers and other articles they have written that you might enjoy reading about.

We will be posting synopsis and links to the latest, greatest and something we thought might need to be revisited articles from all of our writing, writers and readers websites included in that list is Jolene's eBooks and more Blog Posts, Jolene's eBooks and More Store Updates and Sales, Webs and Blogs For Writers Tips Articles and Discounts for author services offered on that website, Women Detectives Information Blog articles, Will You Remember Me biography writing blog articles, and our editorial blog for just the fun of it called What The Hell Blog..

Occasionally, we will post current or previous articles we have posted to the women writer's fan sites we have created and maintained over the years including the Mrs. Pollifax Blog, Sandra West Prowell Fan Site, Barbara Comfort Fan Site and the Janie Bolitho Fan Site. None of these great writers had websites of their own so we created them for them. Sadly, now each of them has passed away but they and their writing deserve to be remembered. If you haven't read any of their books and like a good mystery then please check

Local Author Expos Great For Marketing

Finding and participating in Local Author Expos in your area is a great inexpensive way to promote yourself and your books that you have published. Of course, when you are going somewhere in person and promoting your books you are going to need to bring some copies to sell (at least a dozen or so) maybe one or two to give away as a door prize that the organizer might be having. You will need your business card with your name and website, social media information on it to give away to everyone who walks by and a few inexpensive items for people to pick up and take with them like a bookmark, some candy or even pens/pencils with your name or book title on them. Something that they may keep to remind them later to buy a copy of your book.

on a wide variety of networks when they approve you for their Premium Catalog including Barnes and Noble, Apple iBooks, and more. They offer several FREE eBooks for authors about formatting your eBook correctly, marketing your eBook and they have lots of help pages as well. A great marketing tool is to have a special price for library copies and tell your local libraries about your book is available on the Overdrive Library section at a special price for them. Most local library systems want to buy books by local authors.

for reference we could get to help us on our journey to writing a sellable biography. I already have a subject or two in mind to write about and have begun my research using some of the online research sites we have mentioned in our previous posts. It is almost time to bite the bullet and try to organize all this research into a cohesive form and write an outline for the book. And along the way, we discovered that we might need to invest in a decent photo program that can improve pictures that we have scanned to include in the story.

detective writer this month is Tamar Myers. She writes the Abigail Timberlake in the Den of Antiquity series. She also writes two other series but we are focusing on this one this month. Ms. Myers was born in the Congo in a missionary village and her latest series is focused in that area. She started writing when she was in college and tried to get published but she never hit until over 20 years later. Now there is no stopping her. We like the Den of Antiquity series as it has fun titles, quirky characters and actually comes to an end. Cozy mysteries are always great to read as they take an unlikely person as the “detective” and in this case an antique dealer.
